Paul Wranitzky (Pavel Vranicky) was born in the southern Moravian village of Neuversch (today Nová Všerice, Czech Republic) were he received his first musical training at the local Premonstratensian monastery. After studies in Jihlava and Olomouc, he moved to Vienna in 1776 to study theology at the university, where he also became director of music at the theological seminary.

In 1783 he became music director to Count Johann Baptist Esterházy of Galantha, an amateur oboist and distant relative to Haydn's employer. Upon the count's recommendation, Wranitzky joined the Viennese Masonic Lodge Zur gekrönten Hoffnung, for which he composed songs as well as symphonies. The composer Joseph Martin Kraus (1756–1792) was a visiting member at the lodge in 1783. Kraus, an already established composer, recognised Wranitzky's budding compositional talent and provided encouragement and possibly some lessons. Several early publications also mention Wranitzky as a student of Haydn.

Wranitzky and Mozart became masonic brothers when three lodges merged in 1785. A concert given at the lodge on 15 December 1785 included two symphonies by Wranitzky, expressly written for the lodge, as well as a cantata, a piano concerto and improvisations by Mozart.

In 1785, Wranitzky became orchestra director at the Kärntnertortheater and two years later also at the Burgtheater. From the early 1790s until his death he would hold the position of first orchestra director for both court theatres.

Wranitzky's first stage work, Oberon, König der Elfen, was premiered by Schikaneder's troupe at the Theater auf der Wieden in 1789. Its success prompted Schikaneder to regard Haydn's membership application and welcoming Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven. Only in recent years has his music again begun to garner the attention it clearly deserves.

Compared to his exact contemporaries Mozart and Kraus, Wranitzky began his serious compositional activities late in life. While a sizeable body of canons and part songs for male voices were probably produced during his student years, the first datable instrumental compositions are from the early 1780s when he was already in his mid-twenties. However, he quickly made up for lost time and became a very productive composer, notwithstanding his busy rehearsal and performance schedule at the theatres.

While Wranitzky composed in most genres, symphonies seem to have held a special position in his creative interest as he produced them continuously during his career. Today 45 symphonies survive, making him one of the most prolific composers of his day in the genre. During the second half of the 1790s, Wranitzky was the most important symphonist in Vienna. It is therefore not surprising that many features of Wranitzky's style are echoed in the early symphonies of Beethoven.

Symphony in D major, Op. 25 'La Chasse'

Wranitzky wrote several symphonies containing hunt movements, a popular genre in 18th-century music. Bearing the title La Chasse, the Sinfonie à grand Orchestre, Op. 25 was published in 1793.

The Allegro maestoso first movement is brimming with optimism and anticipation. After a unison opening statement, assorted rhythmic patterns and orchestration create forward momentum. The contrasting development section contains a darker episode reminiscent of Wranitzky's storm depictions, but the cloudy mood is quickly dispelled.

Possibly a reference to outdoor divertiment, the stately Menuetto and its rustic Trio are placed as the second movement. The slow movement, an idyllic serenade in compound ternary form, features woodwind solos in the expanded repeats. After a contrasting, stem middle section in the relative minor, the pastoral mood returns in full force as the solo flute and oboe evoke the calls between two birds, perhaps a male courting a female?

The hunting horns sound and with a Mannheim crescendo the orchestra sets off into the La Caccia finale. The excitement is palpable as the movement chases towards the jubilant ending amid hunting calls and varied orchestral textures.

While making ample use of the horns, the original version of the Symphony did not contain any parts for trumpets. For the private concerts of Ferdinand III of Tuscany, exiled in Vienna due to the Napoleonic wars, Wranitzky added trumpets and, for the Finale, a timpano (a large kettle drum). This recording presents the extended orchestration for the first time.

Die gute Mutter (1795)

After a six-year hiatus, the German-language opera productions at the Vienna court theatre reopened on 11 May 1795 with the premiere of the two-act opera Die gute Mutter with music by Wranitzky.

An adaptation of the French play La Bonne mère, set in the Austrian countryside, the plot revolves around the widow Rosalia. Her daughter Marianne is courted by the Viennese fop Rosenhügel, sending her sweetheart, boy-next-door Christel, into despair. Unimpressed by his fickle Rosenhügel, Rosalia devises a way to make her daughter realise who truly deserves her love.

As the opera opens, local villagers dressed in their finest clothes are preparing the start of a ring-dance. Fittingly, the light-hearted Overture makes use of country dance themes, which will also be heard in the final chorus.

Symphony in C major, Op. 33, No. 2

The set of Dray grosse Sinfonien, Op. 33 was published in 1798 with a dedication to Baron Peter von Braun, manager of the Viennese court theatres.

As part of his duties at the court theatres, Wranitzky provided incidental music to numerous plays. Sometimes existing symphonies were reused for the stage, and sometimes stage music made its way into symphonies. This symphony is an example of the latter.

The opening Allegro maestoso comes from the first-act overture to the play Sivi Brahe oder Die Neugierigen (1794). In clearly articulated sonata form, the spaciousness of the movement is enhanced by broad musical gestures, running scales and unison passages. A tranquil Adagio with muted strings and interweaving wind solos, the second movement comes from the third-act overture to the romantic tragedy Die Spanier in Peru oder Rollas Tod (1795). The pert Menuetto, clearly not for dancing, frames a more relaxed Trio.

The Finale surprisingly opens with a rustic slow introduction, a reuse of the short overture to the ballet Die Weinlese (1794). The frolicking Allegro, cast in sonata form, makes great use of its propelling opening motif. Masterfully scored and irresistibly catchy, it illustrates the care Wranitzky took in composing his symphonic finales.

Paul Wranitzky, after Bossler
Paul Wranitzky moved to Vienna from his native Moravia at the age of 20, mixing with the likes of Haydn and Mozart. As the most important symphonist in Vienna in the late 1790s, his style influenced the early symphonies of Beethoven. The Symphony in D major ‘La Chasse’ reflects the popularity of hunting music, and is heard here for the first time in its expanded version. The overtures to Mitgefühl and Die gute Mutter represent Wranitzky’s skill as a composer for the theatre, as does the masterfully scored Symphony in C major in which the composer repurposes some incidental and ballet music.
